

Governor Cuomo:

What are you afraid of?

Hundreds of New York public school teachers have invited you to come into their classrooms to see for yourself what all kids need.

They want you to understand the impact of over-testing, crowded classes, lack of supplies and too few supports for teachers and struggling students.

They want you to see for yourself, rather than listening to your millionaire contributors who keep telling you that teachers are to blame for everything that's wrong in our schools.

We know that the teachers did not support your re-election bid. But as The New York Times recently wrote: It is time "to move beyond peripheral concerns and political score-settling" to confront "the inequality in school funding that prevents many poor districts from lifting their children up to state standards."

You talk a lot about teachers. Why not talk to teachers?

Come to one of our classrooms:

The door is always open.
